

HAZARDS CAMPAIGN

The 37th National Hazards Conference 2026 4-6 Sept. Keele University (Reservations Now Open)

Mind & Body: The Critical Work of Safety Reps in Protecting Workers

Following on from the success of last year's National Hazards Conference, the 37th annual conference will be another informative event that safety reps and activists should not miss. As in previous years it will educate, inform and connect safety reps from unions around the country along with helping to empower reps in preventing risks to workers.

As public services and regulators continue to struggle with inadequate funding, union reps are on the front-line, holding both employers and government to account. Unions along with their reps need every bit of support they can get to continue to hold that line.

The Hazards conference is a useful tool for reps to help stay across current safety topics. This year there's a renewed focus on the psychological impact that work can have as well as the physical. We very much look forward to welcoming reps and activists to Keele University campus in September.

Work should not be miserable. It should not leave you desperate.

But bad jobs are the reality for too many workers. Too much work for too little pay. Too much hassle and too little support.

Work stress is causing life-threatening heart disease, sickness and depression, even driving some to suicide.

This isn't working.

Strong unions are the single most 'vital' factor in fighting off psychosocial hazards at work - fact.

Get support. Get active. Get organised!
